A Coral Earring

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

A man and a woman sat in an Italian restaurant in New York. At a near table sat a man with a pointed beard The couple were speaking of Naples.

The man with the pointed beard sat gazing at a coral earring the woman were with an evident interest. He also listened to the couple's conversation. When they turned their talk from Naples to Milan he raised his glass toward the man and said:

"Pardon me, signor; I am a citizen of Milan. Meeting one familiar with the place of my home, I cannot refrain from asking him to drink with me to the finest city in the world. I trust the signora will join me as well."

Both the man and the woman raised their glasses and drank to "the finest city in the world," and the proposer of the toast was invited to join them at their table. It was not long before they had become so pleased with each other that an exchange of cards was made. The man with the pointed beard was Andrea Michelli. The others were Signor and Signora Carelli Michelli was familiar with all Italian cities except Naples, where he said he had never been. Carelli, though he admitted he had been there often, did not like the place, declaring it to be the worst city in the world.

"In what respect?" asked Michelli. "Criminality," was the reply.

"Now I think of it." said Michelli, "not long ago our Milan journals were full of a murder in which a beautiful woman high in the social circle was made away with, and at the same time a lot of valuable jewels were

While saying this Michelli fixed his eye on that of Signor Carelli. The latter returned it with the same fixed ness till Michelli's gaze was removed. then the conversation fell into other channels. Michelli called a waiter and asked if he could bring a certain kind of wine from the south of Italy. The wine was brought, and the party drank to the king and queen of Italy, then pursued their chat, drifting over the peninsula for awhile, then taking up the manners and customs of the Amer-

Carelli drank very little wine, but the signora was not sparing of it. For this reason her husband was the more taciturn of the two, and the chat was carried on between her and Michelli.

"May I ask," he said, "where you got those coral earrings? I have never seen such beautiful carving."

The woman before replying looked at her husband, then said that she had been given them by her mother and believed they had been cut in Paris.

"The reason I am interested in them." said Michelli, "is that my wife has

The woman looked again at her hus band for instructions. He was very pule, but said nothing. It seemed that his wife felt the rejuest to be an or der. At any rate, she reluctantly took off one of her earrings and handed it to Michelli. He examined it admiring is, then maked for its unite. Realth for Sick Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Been Woman's Most Reliable Medicine -Here is More Proof.

To women who are suffering from some form of woman's special ills, and have a constant fear of breaking down, the three following letters ought to bring hope:-

North Crandon, Wis. — "When I was 16 years old I got married and at 18 years I gave birth to twins and it left me with very poor health. I could not walk across the floor without having to sit down to rest and it was hard for me to keep about and do my work. I went to a doctor and he told me I had a displacement and ulcers, and would have to have an operation. This frightened me so much that I did not know what to do. Having heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I thought I would give it a trial and it made me as well as ever. I cannot say enough in favor of the Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. MAYME ASBACH, North Crandon, Wis.

Testimony from Oklahoma.

Lawton, Okla. - "When I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I seemed to be good for nothing. I tired easily and had headaches much of the time and was irregular. I took it again before my little child was born and it did me a wonderful amount of good at that time. I never fail to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ailing women because it has done so much for me."-Mrs. A. L. McCasland, 509 Have St., Lawton, Okla.

From a Grateful Massachusetts Woman.

Roxbury, Mass.-"I was suffering from inflammation and was examined by a physician who found that my trouble was caused by a displacement. My symptoms were bearing down pains, backache, and sluggish liver. I tried several kinds of medicine; then I was asked to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has cured me and I am pleased to be in my usual good health by using it and highly recommend it."—Mrs. B. M. Osocop, 1 Haynes Park, Roxbury, Mass.

TWICE WON

By RUTH GRAHAM

Miss Lucia Graham, when seventeen years of age, visited Annapolis, where she was taken down with a severe attack of the midshipman fever. All midshipmen were in her eyes glittering gems, but Sam Flint, a first classman. was a crown jewel. A violent flirtation ensued, and Lucia went home engaged, She said nothing to her parents about the affair, confining her confidence to two or three besom friends. Since Mr. Flint had a year more before him at the academy and Miss Graham two years more at school, with the prospect of four at college, it did not seem that there was any hurry about taking steps for the bridal.

Ten years passed. Miss Graham had turned down a number of suitors-not because she was true to Mr. Flint, for they had simply dropped apart without ever seeing or hearing from each other after their parting at Annapolis. The lady, now twenty-seven years old, was verging on old maidhood and beginning to fear that a husband, home and children were not to be hers.

One day she received a letter bearing a foreign postmark written in an unfamiliar masculine hand. Opening it, she began to read, and noticing that she had received a love letter naturally cast her eyes down for the signature. "Flint?" she muttered. "Who's Flint?" Then, reading further, she was enlightened. Mr. Flint wrote reminding her that she had been his fiancee since their engagement made ten years agone. which had never been broken. He was now a commander in the navy and considered his salary sufficient, etc. Then she remembered her juvenile flir his pocket, kept them concealed and tation at Annapolis. Miss Graham jumped at this chance to escape being an old maid and replied favorably. Then came a letter from Commander Flint stating that he could not get leave to go to her and would she come to him? After much correspondence it was arranged that Miss Graham should sail for London and thence for Port Said, at which point Flint's ship would be at a certain date. After marriage the bride could join her husband at the different ports on the Mediterranean at which his ship was expected to touch.

On Miss Graham's voyage from London a gentleman wearing the undress uniform of an officer in the British army solicited an introduction to Miss Graham and at once showed signs of being descentely smitten with her. The lady are eared to reciprocate, but lost no time in informing him that she was on her way to Port Said to be married to an officer in the United States navy. The Englishman, Colonel Montgomery, took the announcement very hard, declaring that for him the world had collapsed. Miss Graham took pity on him and thrust a new thorn in his side by telling him that had she not pledged her word to another she would favorably consider his proposal, Several British officers came aboard at Gibraltar, none of whom knew Mont-

Graham doubtful of him. However, he soon succeeded in regaining her confidence, and she showed signs of willingness to break with her fiance and marry the Englishman. When the ship approached Port Said Colonel Montgomery pleaded passionately, and at last Miss Graham said that she had not seen her lover for ten years. She would meet him once, confess that she had been won by another and, if he held her to the engagement, would tell him that he must marry her without her heart. Of course gomery. This seemed to render Miss

he would relinquish her. This satisfied the colonel, and it was agreed between them that they should meet and be married at Cairo-that is, provided the lady could be freed from her previous engagement without blame. Commander Flint had agreed to meet his fiancee at Cairo, and this rendered the swapping of lovers convenient-that is, provided they could be kept apart. As soon as the marriage ceremony between the colonel and Miss Graham had been performed they were to proceed together to join his command in India.

Their temporary parting was quite distressing. Montgomery, who appeared elated with his success, did not seem to mind it, but the lady gave evidence of dreading the ordeal of breaking with her American fiance. She clung to her new lover, saying:

"What if I am spurned for dishonorable conduct?" "Come to me, sweetheart. I will convince you that there is nothing dishenorable in a maid following the dictates of her heart.'

Thus assured, Miss Graham tore herself away.

On reaching her hotel she left a note in the office for Commander Flint, briefly confessing that she had been won on the voyage from London and that they had better not meet. She also left a note for the colonel that she had repented her dishonorable bargain and would never see him again. The same afternoon Commander Flint sent up his card, begging an interview. Consent was given, and he appeared. The lady advanced to meet him with a smile and outstretched

"What induced you to play Colonel Montgomery?" she asked.

"You knew me?" "Knew you? Of course I did. the moment you were introduced to me." "I wished to win you again. I see your propensity to play with edged tools is not diminished."
